LEONARDO PASSERI

Contemporary Figurative

URBENICA is a 9.1 meters long, 2 meters tall polyptych, painted across seven wooden panels, which trace the evolution of a constructed civilisation, from its symbolic origin to its eventual domination over life, revealing how power, system, and control progressively replace nature, balance, and memory.

While conceived as a continuous architectural narrative, each panel maintains full structural autonomy, and the modular configuration allows the work to be installed either as a single monumental sequence or as seven interconnected works within broader curatorial contexts.

Leonardo Passeri (b. 1982, Italy) is an Italian painter educated between Italy and the United Kingdom, including at Central Saint Martins College of Art and Design, where he developed a multidisciplinary foundation that informs his distinctive approach to painting. His practice explores the construction of symbolic space through structured visual systems, bringing together architecture, the human figure, and compositional balance to create environments where memory, tension, and psychological presence quietly coexist.
