Toni's comments:

"I have never felt pulled towards selling prints of my work, but a book? - well, I love books and it feels like a different kind of offering, one that's much more me. With the tactile feel of a poetry book and the image quality of an art book, Letters to the Muse brings together my paintings and writing; two things I've never really been able to separate. Letters to the Muse takes an honest journey through the creative process; how it feels to follow the Muse's siren call while also trying to live a human life."

We'll either get Toni to ship you a brand new copy of "Letters to the Muse" upon purchase or we'll include a new copy when you buy from the gallery.

Jane Pine - Featured Artist

Figurative / Devon, England

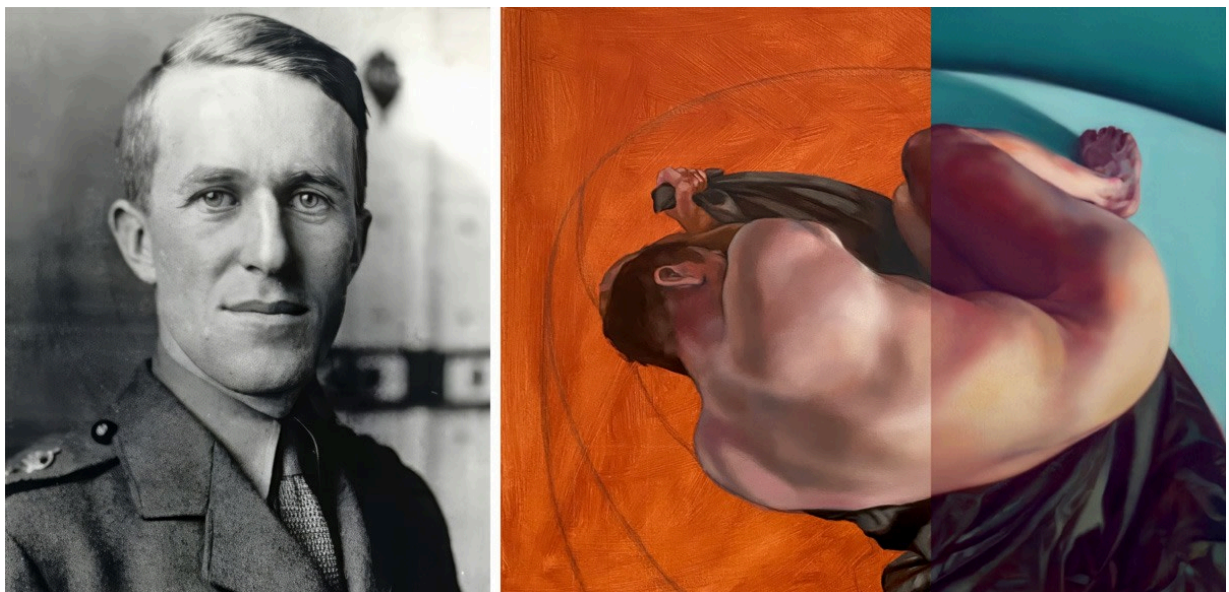

On a fog-shrouded morning in May of 1919, Jane Pine's grandfather, Frederick Joseph Daw, survived a dramatic plane crash outside Rome. The aircraft, flying from England to Cairo, clipped the treetops and struck the ground while attempting a landing in poor visibility, killing both the pilot and co-pilot and tearing the tail away from the fuselage.

Registration № D5439 from 58 Sqn RAF, en route to Cairo

Remarkably, Daw emerged almost unharmed and upon hearing the cries of a fellow passenger trapped in the wreckage, he made his way into the detached tail section, freed the man from a tangle of parachute lines, and carried him to safety.

That injured passenger was none other than T. E. Lawrence — “Lawrence of Arabia” — who suffered a broken collarbone and several broken ribs and the rescue sparked a lifelong friendship between the two men.

In recent years, Jane has created a series of original oil paintings inspired by the bond forged between her grandfather and Lawrence. Each work incorporates the flowing silk of the parachute that once entangled Lawrence, using it as a symbolic thread between survival, fragility, and trust. The figures she paints — typically one or both men — are shown unclothed; not for provocation, but to express emotional vulnerability and the stripped-back humanity of two individuals marked by trauma. The poses are introspective and unguarded, echoing the moment when they confronted their own physical and emotional limits.
